But before you work on your Express, doublecheck to see if you have a Honda Express owners manual. In 1977, Honda unveiled the Honda Express NC50 to the North American market. This new bike was designed to answer the demand for fuelefficient vehicles following the 1973 oil crisis. It came with a fuelefficient twostroke singlecylinder engine. It was also designed to be easy and straight forward to operate. Honda was able to accomplish this by using a small oil pump and a fully automatic transmission. In 1979, the na50, or Express II, was released. It was manufactured until 1981. The 1981 model only came with a 2speed automatic transmission. The nx50, also known as the Honda express sr, used a completely different engine from the nc and na50. It came equipped with a variable transmission, beltdriven, slightly different intake manifold, and a more massive reed valve block. The nu50 and nu50m, or Honda urban express, was the replacement for the express II model in 1982 and was only manufactured until 1983. It used a similar beltdriven. Most bikes' top speed is approximately 30 mph. It comes with an electric start and other standard features including; indicators, oil injection, CDI ignition, an alternator, 12v battery, oil tank indicator, and beefier shocks and larger wheels than the regular Express. A uniquely restricted version was manufactured just for the lower speed requirements to be sold in Iowa; the Iowa models were limited to a maximum of 25mph. However,

Where did you purchase your spokes Online if so, can you post the part site please. Good Luck It was seized, or so i thought. I started to tear it down thinking it was going to be simple, and the motor is, but the gear box, well, i dont want to rip into it without some advise. I got the engine spinning now, but only counter clockwise.It ran when he parked it, so, if i can figure out the problem, it will again run.Thanks. Darren in Canada. There is a lot of shared tech between the 2, but there is an electric starter and a 12v power system. I was wondering if you had a source for a copy of the NX50 manual. This is the only tank I own and they dont make anymore of those dipsticks to replace it. Any ideas on what I can do. I tried getting that grommet out with the glass ball, couldnt get it done. Anyways if anyone has a technique on how to get it out and maybe real seal it I would very appreciate a response. Here is whats going on.I took a peice of aluminum and made it just a little bigger then the see threw oil hole. Took some 2 part epoxy and glued it onto the side of the tank. So far so good! Seals great, only down side is you cant see the oil lvl in the tank just have to stay on top and make sure it doesnt get to low in the tank. But I painted the peice of aluminum orange to match the bike. Blends right in.So if any of you guys have this problem later down the road, this was a great 0 dollar fix. Thanks Josh Weve checked everything we can think of and are stumped. The scooter is running but keeps getting air in the fuel line. If you take the line off and let it fill back up it will run fine again for a while. Youll get it started and it will run great but a couple blocks down the road it putters out again no fuel. It keeps happening very often.

Weve cleaned the fuel tank, weve checked seals, weve checked the petcock. Any idea why this is happening. Any advice I just recently purchased an 81 express and intend on fixing it up and restoring it. So thanks again! Do you have a link for the PDF of the Clymer manual I can add to the website Also. send me some pictures of your NC50 and I will post them on the website. Out of the dumpster.
